Instructional Design

Define Simply
Morning activities set students up for success with well-established classroom routines. A Do Now assignment begins the day with an instructional activity to maximize the opportunity for student learning and minimize inappropriate behaviors in the classroom.

Introduce students to the morning routine by creating simple steps. A Do Now is an assignment that is already on the board when students walk into class. Having a short 3–5-minute assignment ready helps students transition into the learning environment.
It is recommended that Do Now activities are not intellectually challenging (e.g., an open-ended opinion or reflective question).

Steps:
1. Greet the teacher
2. Hang your backpack on the hook
3. Put anything you need in your desk
4. Take out a pen and paper
5. Look at the whiteboard
6. Start your Do Now assignment
7. When you finish, read quietly

Model/Demonstrate with Examples
Model an example for students going through each step of the process.

Practice in All Relevant Settings
Practice the morning routine during the day, especially in the first couple weeks of school.

Monitor & Provide Positive Feedback and Reinforcement
Monitor students’ progress and offer group specific praise after the morning routine is complete. For example, “Thank you class for getting started on your Do Now assignment quickly and quietly. I look forward to hearing your answers. Who would like to share first?”

Based on Data, Adjust Instruction & Reteach
Teachers should monitor how well the class is learning the morning routine and increase practice whenever necessary.
